Austin, Sept 10. Wonder if you have any superstitions about what will make it rain. Twice we left the top down on the car last week and it rained both times, but not enough to count...thank the baby peaches...and we didn't even do it on purpose. Most of us remember learning the legend of the bluebonnets in a song in elementary school about sacrificing a blue-eyed doll on an indian shaman's fire--and it rained and came up bluebonnets. Remember that one? The whole idea of sacrifice to get what you want is something we grew up with. 'Turns out, if you listen to the modern shamans, it's not the sacrifice or turning your cap wrongside out but sending up the desire and working with the law of attraction and "getting into the vortex" (is that like latex? maybe like having to lie down on the bed to squeeze into a mental girdle or something?) that brings about results. Prayer is another word for it. But we'd sure like to meet whoever prayed up the storms we finally got. That was a heckuva connection, and we have a list . . .

Mary Ann Mellenbruch Meigs sent in a wonderful link to a story about Meiling's family that you have to see--CLICK HERE. It's part of a KLRU series titled "Austin Revealed" and features Meiling and her brother Joe Michael Lung talking about their family history and how the "Chinese Americans" fit into the Austin cultural map. But we are with Joe Michael on that cultural labeling business--we're all just Americans. Huge thanks to Mary Ann for this one.

Would you like to see yours pop up on the right month? Especially as we hit our "golden" years? whenever THAT is? 30 years from now? just reply and we will take care of that little detail for you.
